Woman raped in Trenton after work

Saturday, April 10, 2010

By JOE D'AQUILA Staff writer

TRENTON — Police are on the hunt for a man who raped a woman as she was leaving her job in the city on Friday night.

Police said the woman left work about 5:30 p.m. Friday then walked to her car in the parking garage on Yard Avenue.

As she entered the vehicle, she was attacked from behind by a man who forced her into the car and began sexually assaulting her, police said.

As she was being raped, police said, the woman spotted a man walking near her vehicle. She started to scream and banged on the car window in an attempt to get his attention.

Police said the attacker then fled the scene, and the passerby gave chase. He lost him though, and he was last seen running towards East State Street.

The attacker was described as a black male with dark skin, about 5-foot-7, with a medium build, brown eyes and short black hair. He was wearing blue jeans and a dark shirt at the time.

Police said they hope to soon have a composite sketch created of the suspect based on the victim's description.

Anyone with information about the attack should call Detective Gregory Hollo at (609) 989-3753 or the Trenton Police confidential tip line at (609) 989-3663.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. --

Police are sending out a warning to shoppers after a woman is abducted and sexually assaulted at a metro-area mall.

Officers said the incident happened in broad daylight and that the woman was assaulted in her own car.

The victim was found at a bridal shop and told police that she had been shopping at some stores across the street when she was attacked.

"When she approached her vehicle to leave in a parking garage structure, she was approached by a black male from behind who was brandishing a weapon," Lt. Ron Bacy said.

The woman was then forced to drive to her bank and withdraw some money, officers said.

"Sometime during that contact she was sexually assaulted," Bacy said.

The attacker then drove the woman to the intersection of Northwest 56th Street and Penn Avenue where he let her out in a strip mall parking lot.

Police said that there was likely little she could have done to prevent the attack.

However, officers said they would like women to stay on guard.

"At all times people should be aware of their surroundings," Bacy said.

Police would only say the abduction happened in a parking garage at 1900 Northwest Expressway -- which is the address of Penn Square Mall.

Mall officials said that they had not been informed of any crime taking place.

On New Year's Eve, Delexis Maloy began a crime spree that put residents in the central city on edge.

Two of the offenses - a rape and armed robbery - were committed after he slipped into the backseats of vehicles belonging to unsuspecting victims.

Lindsay Navarre, an assistant Lucas County prosecutor, said many of the victims believed they would not live through the robberies and attacks.

"These are some of the most traumatized victims I have ever talked to," she said. "They were very scared."

Monday, facing results of a DNA test that proved he sexually assaulted a woman whom he confronted at gunpoint in a McDonald's restaurant parking lot on March 9, Maloy, 20, pleaded no contest to eight felonies.

The defendant's pleas to one count each of rape, aggravated burglary, and kidnapping, two counts of robbery, and three counts of aggravated robbery were given in Lucas County Common Pleas Court.

Two of the convictions include specifications that guns were used in the crimes.

Flanked by his attorney, David Klucas, Maloy said little in court other than to politely give one-word answers to standard plea-agreement questions from Judge Gene Zmuda, who found him guilty.

Maloy faces up to 82 years in prison at his sentencing hearing Oct. 29.

As part of a plea agreement, three additional counts of kidnapping, two counts of aggravated burglary, and one count each of attempted rape and burglary will be dropped at sentencing and prosecutors will not recommend a sentence to Judge Zmuda.

ANGEL MATURINO RESENDEZ: THE RAILROAD KILLER

By Joseph Geringer

Terror Near Tracks

One of the more romantic elements of American folklore has been the criss-crossing rail system of this country steel rails carrying Americans to new territories across desert and mountain, through wheat fields and over great rivers. Carl Sandburg has flavored the mighty steam engine in elegant prose and Arlo Guthrie has made the roundhouse a sturdy emblem of Americas commerce.

But, even the most colorful dreams have their dark sides.

For nearly two years, a killer literally followed wheatfield Americas railroad tracks to slay unsuspecting victims before disappearing back into the pre-lit dawn. His modus operandi was always the same he struck near the rail lines he illegally rode, then stowed away on the next freight train to come his way. Always ahead of the law.

Angel Maturino Resendez, 39 years old, was apprehended early this month (July, 1999) after eluding state police for two years and slipping through a two-month FBI net until, after nine alleged murders, he was finally traced and captured by a determined Texas Ranger.

Known, for apparent reasons, as "The Railroad Killer," Angel Resendez (who was known throughout much of the manhunt by the alias Rafael Ramirez) has been called "a man with a grudge," "confused," hostile" and "angry" by the police, the news media and psychiatrists. He is an illegal immigrant from Mexico who crossed the international border at will. Most of his crimes took place in central Texas, but he is suspected of having killed as far north as Kentucky and Illinois.

While he fits the mold of serial killers such as David Berkowitz and the Boston Strangler, Resendez killed more meditatively for something he needed: alcohol, drugs, a place to hide out, though usually money. He raped, but "sex seemed almost secondary," according to former FBI profiler John Douglas. Douglas calls Resendez "just a bungling crook very disorganized," but one whose own disorganization worked well for him. Because his trail was haphazard, because he himself didnt know where he was heading next, this directionless, drifting form of operation kept Resendez inadvertently ever-the-more elusive. FBI special agent Don K. Clark says that the manhunt was complicated by the fact that Resendez had "no permanent address" while continuing to travel unchecked "throughout the United States, Mexico and Canada."

Mugshot of Angel

While his travels might best be described as spontaneous, and his slayings as combustive, that is not to say that the Railroad Killer didnt have his own particular signature. He pretty much followed a routine. For one, the murders all occurred "in close proximity to train track locations," to quote Clark.

Late last month, in the heat of the intensive manhunt for the murderer, John Douglas described what appeared to be the killers simple but deadly agenda:

"When he hitches a ride on the freight train, he doesnt necessarily know where the train is going. But when he gets off, having background as a burglar, hes able to scope out the area, do a little surveillance, make sure he breaks into the right house where there wont be anyone to give him a run for his money. He can enter a home complete with cutting glass and reaching in and undoing the locks.

"Hell look through the windows and see whos occupying it. The guys only 5 foot-7, very small. In factthe early weapons were primarily blunt-force trauma weapons, weapons of opportunity found at the scenes. He has to case them out, make sure he can put himself in a win-win situation."

Where he came from, what spurred his crime spree, what kind of man was Resendez these will be examined in the succeeding chapters. For now, lets pause to examine his list of victims.

The Killings

Following is a list of the nine serial murders attributed to Resendez:

VICTIM 1: August 29, 1997/Lexington. KY: Christopher Maier, 21, a University of Kentucky student, and his girlfriend are attacked while walking along the tracks near the college. Maier is bludgeoned to death and she is raped and beaten, almost to the point of death. She miraculously survives.

Guns & Schools Fact Sheet

- * Since 2006, Utah has allowed licensed individuals to carry concealed handguns on the campuses of all public colleges. Concealed carry has been allowed for several years at both Colorado State University and Blue Ridge Community College in Virginia. To date there has not been a single act of violence as a result.
- * In 2007, an armed concealed carry permit holder in Colorado stopped Matthew Murray during his church shooting spree.
- * In 2002, at Virginia's Appalachian Law School, a shooting spree ended when two armed adult students confronted the attacker and persuaded him to surrender.
- * In 1997, 16-year-old Luke Woodham killed his ex-girlfriend and her friend with a hunting rifle, then wounded 7 others at a high school in Pearl, Mississippi. Earlier that morning, Woodham had stabbed his mother to death. Assistant Principal Joel Myrick retrieved a handgun from his car and interrupted Woodham's shooting spree, holding him at bay until police arrived, which certainly saved other students' lives.
- * In 1998 in Edinboro, Pennsylvania, local merchant James Strand used his shotgun to "coax" 14-year old Andrew Wurst into dropping his gun and surrendering to police. Wurst had just killed one teacher and wounded another teacher and two classmates.
- * In contrast, within the gun-free "safe zone" of Virginia Tech, in 2007, Seung-Hui Cho killed 32 people and wounded many others, in two separate attacks, two hours apart, with the assurance that none of the other students or professors would be armed and able to defend themselves. In January 2006, prior to the shootings, legislator Todd Gilbert had

- introduced a bill into the Virginia House of Delegates to forbid public universities in Virginia from preventing students from lawfully carrying a concealed handgun on campus. The university had opposed the bill and it died in committee. [source: Wikipedia]
- * "...the recent rash of public school shootings...raise[s] questions about the unintentional consequences of laws. The five public school shootings [which occurred during the 1997-98 school year] took place after a 1995 federal law banned guns (including permitted concealed handguns) within a thousand feet of a school. The possibility exists that attempts to outlaw guns from schools, no matter how well meaning, may have produced perverse effects. It is interesting to note that during the 1977 to 1995 period ... 15 shootings took place in schools in states without right-to-carry laws and only one took place in a state with this type of law. "
- * Deaths and injuries from mass public shootings (like Jonesboro, AR, and Littleton, CO) fall dramatically after RTC concealed-handgun laws are enacted. Where data was available both before and after passage of such laws, the average death rate from mass shootings plummeted by up to 91% after such laws took effect, and injuries dropped by over 80%!
- * A July 1993 U.S. Department of Justice study found that "boys who own legal firearms... have much lower rates of delinquency and drug use [than those who obtained them illegally] and are even slightly less delinquent than nonowners of guns." It concluded that, "for legal gunowners, socialization appears to take place in the family; for illegal gunowners, it appears to take place 'on the street'."
